COURT OF HONOR

Initiated Ten Candidates Friday Night.

The Court of Honor at Friday night's meeting initiated ten candidates and has a large number of other candidates ready to receive the work. This organization is an old one and is growing larger and better rapidly.

Mrs. Laura Adder, a deputy organizer, is here and is arousing much interest in the order.

The Court now has a membership of over 300 and is in a very prosperous condition.

Arrangements are being made to hold an open meeting next Friday evening.

Relates to Rural Carriers.

A Washington special says that if a bill introduced by Representative Hamlin of Missouri passes, rural mail carriers will not be required hereafter to wear uniforms and they will have the right to communicate to members of Congress any complaint or petition they desire to make, a privilege now denied them. Another bill introduced today provides $300 a year extra to each rural carrier to reimburse him for the expense of his horse and wagon.

WEDDING TODAY

Morton King and Miss Ruth Wright Married at Jonesville.

Morton King of Dupont, and Miss Wright of Jonesville, accompanied by the latter's mother and brother, went to Columbus Friday evening and procured a license to wed. They were married this afternoon at the home of the bride's parents and left for Madison on a few days' honeymoon trip.

When the couple returned from Columbus on a late train Friday evening, their Jonesville friends turned out in large numbers, welcoming them with a shower of rice. A regular old fashioned charivari was given them at Mr. Wright's, the same as if they were already married. Mr.
King acted the good fellow and treated.
The many friends of the couple join in wishing them a long and prosperous wedded life.

GOES TO KENTUCKY

Prof. M. E. Jennings Will Teach in Military Institute.

Prof. M. E. Jennings who is a graduate of the Seymour high school and a son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Jennings, will take a step forward in school work next year.

The Warsaw Daily Times says: Prof. M. E. Jennings, who has had charge of the science department of the Warsaw high school during the past year, has been elected to take charge of the same department for the Kentucky Military Institute. He will finish the present term in Warsaw and will probably assume his new duties about September 1. Prof. Jennings is a graduate of Indiana University and, during the time that he has been connected with the Warsaw schools, has proven himself a very capable instructor. Besides serving as a teacher, he has been a great help in athletics. He proved himself very efficient as coach of the football team and is now directing the work in baseball. The news of his intended departure from the city will be heard with regret by the teachers and students of the high school.

The Kentucky Military Institute is located at Lyden, Ky., eight miles from Louisville. During the winter months the entire school is moved to Eau Gallie, Florida.

Prof. Moulton's Lectures.

Prof. Moulton has given the clearest reconciliation of questions affecting science and theology ever presented in this city or elsewhere.
The class who heard these lectures are a unit in their acceptance of his philosophy, to them. His distinction between the Spiritual life, the mental power and the physical existence as applied to the human race is thorough, and reconciles many things which have hindered people in their attempts to satisfy all the conflicting theories along these lines.

His second series of lectures will begin Monday night at the lecture room in the library building. All persons who have a desire to come into a fuller understanding of these problems should attend them.

Meetings Will Close.

The protracted meetings which have been in progress at the Christian church at Jonesville the past two weeks, will close Sunday. There have been five accessions to the church and they will be baptized Sunday evening. Rev. Mr. Chappel of Columbus, the county evangelist, has been conducting the meetings.

Don't Fail

To attend the Chicken Supper at St. Paul's school room Monday evening, April 17, 1911. At this time the ladies of the church will conduct an apron sale. a17d

here with Ralph Boas and wife for several weeks, was called to her home in Vallonia this morning on account of the illness of her mother.

room for its store at Brownstown and will increase its stock. The south room of Mrs. George Hamilton's fever.

SHOES

If you are not satisfied with the school shoes you have been buying, it is very evident you have not tried the Rice & Hutchins shoe, for they repeat. The constant patronage of buyers of this shoe is the best evidence of their worth.

You will never know the full possibilities of school shoes until you try them.
Why not now?

ROSS

TWO CITY BOARDS
HELD SESSIONS

Friday night.—Oration By Chairman
Davison of Board of Public Works.

THE STREET COMMISSIONER

Asked Numerous Questions by Finance Board Regarding Money
Collected by Him.

The Board of Public Works and the Board of Finance held meetings last night but no business of very great importance was up for consideration.
All members were present excepting Councilman Mills. Practically all of the time of the Board of Works session was consumed by a lengthy oration by Chairman Davison on the matter of the railroad track through the city park. He contended that the track would not mar the beauty of the place and then proceeded to hand the citizens who oppose the track a few hot ones of his own particular make.
He put these citizens in the undesirable class that never accomplishes anything and interferes with any project business men start. The statement was broad enough to include the members of the Merchants' Association and all.

Some of the opposition was also classified with the hoodlum element.
One citizen was singled out for special mention.

The chairman announced that he desired the engineer and street commissioner to accompany him Saturday to investigate several alleys that are needing improvement.

The session of the Board of Finance was given over to a little grilling for Street Commissioner Burrell.

Chairman Misch, after taking the chair, announced that in pursuance to orders the books of the city officers had been examined and found correct.
He stated that numerous inquiries had been received as to whether all money collected by city employees was turned into the city treasury. The records showed that $6.25 had been turned in by the street commissioner since September for stone, cleaning sewers and for dirt. He was questioned closely as to whether this was all he had received and finally recalled that he had received about $2.50 recently for dirt but had not yet turned it over to the treasurer. He was instructed to do so and ordered to file reports with the Board of Safety each month at same time reports from the chief of police and chief of the fire department are filed.

Incorrigible Rose's Easter

[Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.]

WE did not know what to do with Rose—had not known for a long time. She was incorrigible—an incorrigible giver. She would give away anything, from her slippers to the plume on her hat.

She did that very thing once—took an eighteen inch ostrich plume from her hat and gave it to a girl book agent. And when chided by my sister she merely opened wide her lovely gray eyes and exclaimed:

"Why, Mary Ennis, that girl had never had an ostrich plume in her life, and she looked so tired and discouraged. I just could not buy her book—it was about the horrors of something or other. But you ought to have seen the light in her face when I gave her that beautiful plume."

Perhaps it would have been good to see the light in the girl's face, but the light in Rose's was enough to disarm Sister Mary. It always ended that way. Dozens of Rose's friends had undertaken to scold her roundly for her foolish generosity, but always when she had explained one felt that only a brute could have done different.

Rose had just begun to have some success with her drawings and was earning a little money.

"It will be such a help to her," said a friend. "She loves pretty things so and has very few of them, poor child!"

Mary sniffed, out of patience: "Help? What do you suppose she did with the $30 she got last month for those sketches? Buy her some gloves and neck ribbons and a new waist? Not a bit of it. She sent $5 to some girl she used to know in school who is in Colorado for her health and $5 to some crippled second cousin in the east, gave $5 to the heathen in India and spent the rest on the sick negro that does her chores and on her washerwoman's kids."

The worst of it is Rose's wardrobe. Her soul revels in beauty. She loves pretty things with the ardor of a child. But the prettier a thing is the surer the idea will pop into her head, "What a delightful present for somebody!" It requires the eternal vigilance of Mary and five or six of her intimate friends to keep Rose presentable.

All her friends tried, singly and collectively, to make Rose over "for her own good," and all, singly and collectively, failed utterly. We gave up then and just enjoyed her as she was, for she certainly was a delight. After that we spent our time trying to devise gifts of a sort and give them at a time when they would stick.

Two years before we learned it was utter folly to give Rose things at Christmas, provided one wanted her to keep them. The girls made up that year a magnificent Christmas box full of all manner of dainty and beautiful things for her attractive person and homy room.

But, alas, Christmas afternoon Rose was found in the highest state of delight. It was a beautiful world, she had the dearest friends in it, and this was the best Christmas in nineteen hundred years. We were suspicious at once, and when we had heard the story of the girl who had lost her place in the store, of the woman with a sick husband, of the crippled girl next door, of the old lady with the bronchitis, of the preacher's pretty little homesick wife, of the washerwoman's five children, we had heard the complete story of all our Christmas presents, except a little book of poems which I had sent.

"I kept that," said Rose laughingly, "to remember your presents by."

About the 1st of April Mary had an idea.

"Harvey Ennis," she said, "I tell you what we girls are going to do. You can help anonymously if you want to. The 24th is Rose's birthday. There does not happen to be a single holiday near it, and surely not more than one or two of her friends and proteges have a birthday at the same time. So we are going to make her up just a wonderful birthday box, and maybe she will get a little good of it."

It was magical the way the friends responded to Mary's suggestion, and there were lots of friends, for everybody loved Rose and liked to give her things. That box was a beauty. It looked to me as if it contained everything a girl could use or want, and some more, and everything was of the finest and daintiest.

The box went Thursday evening, Friday was her birthday. Saturday afternoon as sister and I had started downtown Mary said:

"Look at Norah Conway. I never saw her go like that before. What do you suppose the matter with her?"

Norah is a slow, awkward girl of sixteen. She was half running and tumbling down the street in great excitement with a bundle under her arm. Every few minutes she bent her head and peeked through a tear in the paper wrapper at something inside.

"I have it," said Mary, brightening. "She has something new for tomorrow."

"Harvey Ennis!" She stopped and clutched my arm. "Didn't she come down that street?" pointing to the one Rose lived in.

I nodded and bit my lip.

"She's giving them away," Mary said, with wrathful conviction. "Come on; I am going to see." And she turned me about and started toward Rose's home.

On the way we met three other bundles and excited happy faces.

"Rose Merrifield," began Mary, more nearly angry with her friend than I ever had seen her.

"Now—now, honey!" Rose kissed her and patted her on the back until a sigh of resignation came, followed by an adoring smile. "They did not have anything new, you know, for tomorrow, and, Mary, tomorrow is Easter! I've had the loveliest time giving Easter presents." And a faraway light came into her eyes.

"Presents?" echoed Mary. "Why, people don't give presents on Easter."

"That is just it," said Rose. "Nobody was expecting presents, and I had the most glorious time."

And she had—we know she had, as she stood in happy thought looking out of the window at the newly blossoming earth caressed by the sunshine and kissed by the breeze. There was a light in her face that made us forget clothes and presents and anger and think only of Easter.

As we went away neither of us said anything for some time. At the corner we met old Buck Ticknor and his cane that forever went peck-peck-pecking viciously along the walk. For many years old Buck had been saving up for a rainy day—his rainy day. He had let his wife die because he was too stingy to have a doctor, and all his children had died before they were scarcely grown. His grasping mouth, his withered, wrinkled face, his narrow suspicious eyes, always made me shudder.

"Isn't he horrid?" Mary spoke first when we were past.

And then in a moment as her eyes wandered to the blossoming orchard at the edge of town she sighed resignedly:

"I don't know what we will ever do with her, but isn't she a dear? And if one must go to the extreme I guess it is best to take the highest one."

"I am going to, if I can," I said, and Mary looked at me wonderingly.

Next morning was Easter indeed. The world was full of sunshine and early flowers and songs of birds and soft winds.

Rose came to the door herself, for the church bells were just ringing. Never had she looked more beautiful, and that is the end of praise. I stepped into the hall and closed the door behind me. She looked up at me a little surprised, a little agitated.

"Rose"—her lids drooped and hid her soft gray eyes, and she breathed a little quickly—"you have made everybody happy by your gifts, everybody from Bombay to Maine, everybody but me. Won't you make me a present, an Easter gift?"

"What?" she said softly, and her voice fluttered.

"The lady with the lily soul." And I held out my arms wistfully.

When we went out into the sunlight a little while later I said most sincerely and gratefully:

"Rose, you are such a wonderful giver!"

"Do you believe in using words of one syllable?" asked the student of politics.

"Certainly not," replied Senator Sorghum. "Every real gentleman says 'perquisites,' instead of 'graft.'"

Children use it like grown-ups. Shines so easily. No turpentine.

BRONCHITIS

To Whom it May Concern.

Bluevale, Ont., May 4, 1910. "I was sick for two years with chronic bronchitis and a consequent run-down condition. I received no benefit from doctors or from a trip which I took for my health and I had to give up work. Vinol was recommended and from the second bottle I commenced to improve—I gained in weight and strength, my bronchial trouble disappeared, and I am at work again. I want to recommend Vinol to anyone who is in need of such a medicine." Thomas Higgins. (We guarantee this testimonial to be genuine.)

It is the combined action of the curative elements of the cods' livers aided by the blood making and strength creating properties of tonic iron contained in Vinol which makes it so successful in curing bronchitis.

Vinol is a constitutional remedy for chronic coughs, colds, bronchitis and pulmonary troubles, not a palliative like cough syrups.

Vinol contains no oil nor drugs and is far more efficacious than cough mixtures, because it cures the cause. Try it. If you don't think it helps you, we will return your money. The Andrews-Schwenk Drug Co.

TO KEEP THE EASTER LILIES FRESH FOR DAYS

HOW to keep Easter lilies fresh is a bit of plant lore that many housewives will be glad to be informed about because of the gifts they received Sunday. And as the method of preserving them is a simple one, according to an expert florist, there is no reason why many women should not have them blooming for from two to three weeks.

"Besides watering lilies regularly, the most essential thing is to keep them out of drafts," he says, "for nothing is so injurious as to have sudden gusts of wind strike the leaves, blossoms or even the roots, for it blasts them, and they begin to wither."

"They should be sprayed with moderately cold water once each day, preferably in the morning. And the greatest care should be taken to get it directly on the roots and not on the flowers, for every drop of water will make a yellowish spot on the beautiful white petals that detracts from their dazzling color. These lilies need a lot of water for nourishment and once a day is none too often if they are to be kept in good condition. I have known more of them to wilt from neglected watering than from any other cause. So many women give them drinks regularly for three or four days and then forget about it for twenty-four or forty-eight hours, and in that time the mischief is done, and the plant has lost so much nourishment that it is never again fresh. The petals lose their glossy appearance and crispness, become dull and lifeless, the leaves droop and turn yellow, and the once beautiful things show every sign of decay."

"This condition can easily be retarded for from fourteen to twenty days by proper care. I would suggest the gentlest kind of treatment for these delicate flowers and warn persons against touching the petals, for they are easily bruised, and once the surface is cut or scraped the entire blossom quickly dies.

"I would try to keep the plants in a room where there is plenty of fresh air and light, though never in the direct rays of the sun, for if left in the heat they will be burned, because they are so tender and, of course, wilt, just as when they are put in a draft.

"Then, too, I would not allow them to be near heat or a fireplace and would endeavor to keep the atmosphere as near even as possible and never above 60 degrees.

"With the cut lilies the best plan, if they are to be kept four days or a week, is to change the water once a day and to keep in a deep vase where the liquid will extend well up the stems. I would suggest cutting off the ends of the stocks every day, so the flowers will be readily nourished by the water. This is impossible after the pores in the ends close up, as they do unless removed every twenty-four hours."

FLORAL OFFERINGS FOR EASTER TIME

By KATHERINE BLADES.

IT is hard to see why any holiday except Christmas should be observed by sending presents to friends, yet we seem to be generally falling into that custom, whether the day be New Year's, St. Valentine's, St. Patrick's or Easter. If the fashion spreads no doubt ere long we shall feel constrained to include the Fourth of July and election day in the list of gift sending occasions. Even good things may be run into the ground.

Simple presents for children afford them joy at Easter. For them are decorated eggs, boxes of sweets, sugar rabbits or papier mache ones stuffed with sweets. Grown people, in accordance with the exaggerated gift bestowing fashion, often send expensive jewels and bric-a-brac to their friends at Easter. Why they should it is not easy to discover, for there is no reason in it.

For St. Patrick's day there were on sale pretty picture postcards in vivid green whereon to speed the compliments of the season. The same attractive idea might be much more generally adapted to Easter than has been done. Postcards in Easter colors—white, yellow and green—might well have appropriate resurrection and other symbols printed upon them for use at the joyous yet sacred spring festival. There, too, are artistically adorned Easter poems.

But flower gifts and floral decorations at Easter are the best of all.

In the warmer climes of Christendom there is an annual floral festival. Where flowers are abundant it comes just preceding Lent and is commonly called the flower carnival. In our country, except in California and now and then in a southern state, there is seldom a flower festival of any kind, although there might well be such even in the northerly part of the land in May and June.

It is customary to have shining lilies, "pure lilies of eternal peace," in our churches on Easter Sunday. But even there the resources of the Easter colors are not brilliantly brought out. Yellow, vivid, radiant, dazzling—is not that the color of the halo of the saints? Have not certain esoteric cults chosen it as the symbol of developing spirituality? And in the colder regions of this land the splendid daffodils—"Easter flowers," they are well named—are often the only ones in bloom outdoors at Easter time. They are the first fruits of the awakening power of the sun, herald of what is to come.

The flashing yellow daffodils are hardy as the hardest. They endure any amount of freezing. Their dried bulbs may also be taken up from the home garden in the fall and potted in sandy earth and put in a dark place till about two months before Easter, then brought into the light and tended, and they will blossom gloriously at the sacred festival time.

Our Easter church decorations do not include half enough of the significant yellow in their color scheme. Neither at this time do we have half enough flowers of any kind in our homes. Easter cards have become tiresome. Expensive gifts are meaningless; besides, we cannot afford them. But flowers, the most beautiful of all the Creator's gifts except just a little child, are always there for us. They never weary us. Daffodils, lilies, snowdrops, white azaleas, costly or small in price, may be sent as remembrances to our dearest year by year, and they will not be bored therewith. Indeed, the same variety of flower from the same person to the same year after year becomes a badge of unfailing remembrance and significance.

SOME CURIOUS EASTER CUSTOMS

SOME of the old Easter customs are curiously barbaric, and even at the present time the observance of this particular festival is surrounded with more or less superstition, just enough to lend to it the charm of mystery.

Twentieth century maidens don bright yellow garters, secure in their belief that they will be engaged before the year ends, others give their tresses "a hundred strokes three times" with the brush while thinking intently of their hearts' desire, and who does not take good care to wear her new things on Easter day?

Among the earliest of Easter customs are the following:

At Queen's college, Oxford, a herring placed by the cook to simulate a man on horseback is set on a corn salad and brought to the table. This is supposed to represent a red herring riding away on horseback and is the last vestige of the once popular pageants of rejoicing.

It was erstwhile a habit in English towns for the boys, after the Easter service, to run into the street and snatch the buckles from the shoes of the girls whom they were able to catch.

Easter Monday, however, it was turn about, and the women chased the men. If the men refused to pay a sixpence or happened to wear boots the women tried to snatch their hats, and to recover a hat cost a sixpence.

In some old towns great cakes were brought to church and there divided among the young people.

A singular Easter custom was that of "lifting and weaving." A man sitting contentedly in his home was surprised by the servants and women of his household, who entered bearing a great armchair lined with white and decorated with ribbons and favors. The man was forced to sit in the chair and be lifted by the women, to each of whom he must give a sixpence. On a day in Easter week, either Monday or Tuesday, the man lifted the women with similar attendant ceremonies.

The True Vine

(from painting by A. Melville)

Edward I. was lifted in his bed by his ladies and maids of honor, and a record shows the payment made by him to have been some $2,000 in sixpences.

In older days in England monks at Easter acted plays in churches, the favorite subject being the resurrection. Not only were the plays enacted in the churches on these festival days, but there was dancing, particularly in the French cathedrals.

Even the sun, it is said, dances on Easter day.

In Ireland great preparations were made for the last day of Lent. Holy Saturday, about 9 o'clock, a hen and a piece of bacon were put in the pot, and at 12 o'clock there were eating and much merrymaking. At 4 all arose to see the sun dance in honor of the resurrection.

THE MYSTERY OF PAIN.

Text, "If we suffer we shall also reign."
—II Tim. ii, 12.

It's rare food for your infidel friend. He leans back and views you as though he were a visitor from another planet. "Why does your God allow pain?" says he. That sounds judicial. Makes you blink. "If He is almighty why doesn't He abolish it?" Notice his "If I were God" air. "If He were all loving would He permit it?" That's a squealer! You wriggle and squirm mentally. You cough and strangle like a dog that's swallowed a fly. Before you can stammer forth something about the ways of Providence being inscrutable he is gone and you feel as though you had been caught burning incense to your house cat. Then you remember that you would have liked to ask his theory of why the "blind impersonal force" he believes in permits pain. His non-God is as cruel as your personal God and doesn't profess loving intelligence. But he's gone and you're alone with your pain.

Come soon or late pain will get you. It ushered you into the world; it may bow you out. However, the amount between birth and death is curiously exaggerated. Three rainy Sundays out of thirteen will tempt the preacher (also his excuse making church member) to declare that "it always rains on Sunday!" Some of our pain we have earned honestly and ought to be ashamed to mention it. Human wars, with not only shot and shell, but exposure and camp diseases, have handed down quite a few to our human credit or discredit. Modern psychotherapeutics prove that envy, jealousy, hatred and some other unenviable traits are responsible for quite a brood. It's not very polite to blame God for these.

Pain as Warning.

Pain is a signboard. Your physician tells you, "Scientifically pain results from or accompanies deranged, overstrained or otherwise abnormal action of the body and serves as a warning of danger." True. Nature warns there's something wrong. Don't hush the pain—remove the cause! Hushing the pain is removing the red lantern, the danger signal, from a wreck on the road instead of removing the obstruction. Without pain practically every ill would be fatal, because the cause of the pain would not be removed.

Ever see a mother watching her year-old toddler? The button box, the stove, the scissors, the steps, even "kitty's claws," are unknown quantities and qualities to baby—it doesn't know pain—hence mother's watchfulness. After awhile "the burned child dreads the fire" and some other things. Without pain the race would be wiped out of existence. Some babies of older years would walk heedlessly in front of trolleys—fenders are needed even now; others would wander over precipices; some would cut hands and fingers off. Pain is a protection.

Philosophy of Pain.

Your infidel friend's questions started from wrong assumptions. He has many such. One is that what hurts is necessarily evil. Another is that present immediate happiness is the chief end of life. And his notion that a God of love would not allow suffering shows he has a crude idea of the nature of love. He would train his son to believe that boy scouts are best developed on ice cream sodas and cake, while his daughter's basketball team best builds muscle on pickles and fudge. Love is an unselfish devotion that seeks another's highest good, whether for the moment it gives pleasure or pain. Life is not an entertainment; it's an education.

This world is God's university. Death is commencement day; pain has been prominent on the faculty. The oak is a tree plus some storms. A statue is marble plus the chisel. A soldier is a man plus battle. The martyr is flesh and blood plus rack and fagot. In aviation the first rule of flight is to turn the machine against the wind. Mankind rises through adverse winds of suffering. The higher your nerve organization the more you suffer. Tear an arm out of a crab, it will still live—indeed, may grow a new one. Tear an arm from a man, he will die. Man's body is a marvelous harp. "But do not subhuman creatures suffer?" Yes, but only relatively. Cut some of the simplest forms of life in half and they go on their way—two existences now instead of one. "Doesn't the fish-worm wriggle under the hook?" Yes, but it wriggles before the hook touches it. "And the horse?" Yes, the more highly organized he is the more he suffers. But even he has been known to hobble around on a broken leg, nibbling grass in apparent contentment. "And the 'inferior' races?" I have seen on one of the reservations a half dozen Indian boys with a playmate down jabbing pins in him to make him yell—unsuccessfully.

"Our light afflictions," says Paul. Somehow the pounding is turning out bronze doors with beautiful designs. The shearing and the weaving and the dyeing are bringing out beautiful tapestry. Take away suffering? That would take away the power of the soul to endure. "I would rob us of pity. We would lose our heroes and martyrs. It would take away love, redeeming love, that pays a price and smiles at its loss. Take away pain? Then it would take away the Christ on His cross, made through perfect suffering."

When with the reapers I could hear (Such power hath a believing ear)
The whisper of the falling grain,
"In season due we'll rise again."

In winter, when the snow was deep
And life was in its frozen sleep,
I heard a murmur, "Soon the spring
To us will resurrection bring."

In springtime, when the world awoke,
From all the fields a voice there spoke,
And all things sang with one accord,
"We rise as rose our buried Lord."

And all the surging summer through
As grew the flowers my spirit grew.
With all that grows I claim my part—
'Tis always Easter in my heart.

She said idleness had led the boy into crime.

WASHINGTON IS GIVEN SURPRISE

Dr. Hill's Resignation a Diplomatic Sensation.

WAS HE A POTASH VICTIM?

It is intimated that there were several phases of the potash dispute with Germany that were not handled to the satisfaction of the State Department—Resignation Rumors Pursuing Ambassador Bernstorff.

Washington, April 15.—To take effect July 1, Dr. David J. Hill, ambassador to Germany and former assistant secretary of state, has resigned from the diplomatic service. No reason was given for Dr. Hill's retirement from the diplomatic service, and his withdrawal was a surprise to his friends in official life.

Dr. Hill has been ambassador at Berlin since April 2, 1908, when he succeeded Charlemagne Tower. He was assistant secretary of state from October, 1908, until January, 1903, when he was appointed minister to Switzerland. He served as minister to The Netherlands from March, 1905, until he was transferred to Berlin, in April, 1908. He is a resident of Rochester, N. Y.

There are several features of Dr. Hill's resignation which seem to indicate that his retirement from the diplomatic service is due to complications arising out of the potash dispute between the United States and Germany for the last six months. It was denied at the White House, however, that the resignation was caused as a result of friction between Dr. Hill and Secretary Knox. Last year Dr. Hill was assured by President Taft that he would be allowed to remain in Berlin until the end of the present administration, and, acting on these assurances, he leased a new home there. Several weeks ago it was announced by the state department that Dr. Hill had been summoned to Washington to discuss the potash question. The belief here is that there were several phases of the question which were not handled by Dr. Hill to the satisfaction of the state department. His successor has not been chosen.

This unexpected development came with double force, following as it did upon news flashed from Berlin Thursday—and denied at the German embassy here—that Ambassador Bernstorff had resigned as Germany's representative to the United States.

Berlin Not Surprised.

Berlin, April 15.—The resignation of Ambassador Hill has created no surprise in diplomatic circles. Rumors that the German government was unfriendly toward Mr. Hill have been current for some weeks, although there has been ascribed no reason for the change of feeling.

CAUGHT IN FLAMES

Manufacturing Building at St. Louis Burns and Nine Fall Victims.

St. Louis, April 15.—Two are known to be dead and seven more thought to have died in a fire which swept the Essex building, 817-823 Washington avenue. Among those believed to have perished are three girls who appeared at the windows of the fifth floor just as the fire engines arrived. While the ladders were being placed to rescue the trio they were enveloped in flames and smoke and were seen no more. The fifth and sixth floors fell in an hour after the fire started, and the bodies of the girls have not been found.

Hundreds of girls who were working in the building for the six manufacturing firms which occupied the place, made their escape down stairways and over the roof to the fire escapes at the side, and back. The doors leading to the fire escapes in the front, down which the three girls seen at the windows, might have escaped, were locked. This is thought to have been responsible for their death, and Building Commissioner James A. Smith said that he would order a rigid investigation of the premises. A negro elevator boy was the hero of the fire. With the flames all about him he continued to run his car to and from the top floor, bringing down over 100 girls.

BROKE QUORUM

Delegation of Tennessee Legislators Go Over Into Alabama.

Decatur, Ala., April 15.—A filibustering delegation of the Tennessee state legislators composed of twenty members and headed by Jesse C. Groner, arrived here from Nashville, and are the guests of the Hotel Echols. It is understood that the object of the members in coming here is to break a quorum in the state legislature and thus prevent the passage of the proposed liquor manufacturers' law, that is now before the Tennessee state legislature.

Madison, Wis., April 15.—The assembly committee on elections has decided to report for passage the woman suffrage bill. The chances now seem good for the passage of the bill in the assembly. It already has passed the senate.

CAN'T ESCAPE

Prosecutor's Fee in Justices' Courts in Future.

When the new laws go into effect Prosecutor Hays and other prosecutors of the state will receive more fees. This may reconcile the prosecutor of this circuit for the failure of legislature to pass the increase of salary bill in which he showed such a deep interest.

In the future the prosecuting attorney will receive his fee from every case which comes up in the various courts throughout the county. Under the present law offenders who plead guilty to charges filed against them in townships where there is no prosecutor or deputy are not compelled to pay the attorney's fee in connection with the other costs. In many ways the new law will make for uniform treatment in cases of conviction in the county. In the past those who pleaded guilty to charges in justices' courts in remote territories escaped with but a few dollars and costs. Those in townships in which the prosecutor had appointed a deputy faced an additional charge for the prosecutor's services. The change will make the costs the same in all courts of justice of the peace. As yet the force of the measure has not been felt.

He gives you ten per cent. off on all kinds of shoes. You buy from P. Colabuno from Saturday, 8th, until Saturday, 15th. a15d

Dr. Butts, health officer at Crothersville, has set Friday, April 28 as cleanup day for the town.

Peruna Secrets You Should Know

Golden Seal, the root of the above plant, is a very useful medicine. Many people gather it in our rich woodlands during the summer. Few people know how valuable it is in dyspepsia, catarrh, and as a general tonic.

Many thousand pounds of this root are used each year in the famous catarrh remedy, Peruna. This fact explains why everybody uses Peruna for catarrh.

In the list of possible candidates for the Republican nomination for governor next year, the name of ex-lieutenant governor Hugh Miller of Columbus, frequently appears. He was a candidate in 1908 but owing to the political conditions that year, the alignment of the political forces of the state for the contest was such, that his real strength with the party and the people was not indicated by the result.

Probably no public man in Indiana is held in higher esteem generally than Mr. Miller. His public record and his life as a private citizen commend him to the people as a man who can be trusted. No one questions his qualifications for governor, and while not of the slap them on the back and kiss the baby brand of electioneers, he is a good campaigner, and would make a strong candidate in a warm political contest. While loyal to his friends, he has not been involved in bitter factional troubles and in the peculiar conditions now confronting the party, he has every recommendation for a harmonizing head for the ticket.

CHAPTER VIII.

A FEW moments later I passed from the camp with my troop.
Again I saluted the princess and again received scant recognition, or I thought so.

"What new plot was Vasca hatching this morning?" asked O'Ryan when we were alone that night.

"Becoming my friend," I answered.
"A fiendish plot indeed. I would sooner have him as an enemy."

"We must wait and see, O'Ryan."
"Yes, and ride as far apart from him as possible when we charge the enemy. It is so easy to make a mistake when you ride as a friend beside your bitterest foe," he went on. "We have changed sham fighting for the real thing, but—"

"But still you are not satisfied," I laughed.

"No. We haven't left any of our dangers behind us. We've brought them all with us, excepting one."

"And that one?"
"The princess."

"How could you expect we were going to leave our dangers behind?"

"I didn't expect that you were going to become such an important piece in the game, Verrall," he answered promptly.

"A kind of white elephant to you, eh?"

"Well, I confess to a partiality for less exalted personages to deal with in games of this kind. The greater you are the more numerous are your enemies."

"And my friends?"
"Sometimes, Verrall, only sometimes.
The friends who can be truly happy at a companion's pre-eminence are few, even in the civilized world. In a country like this, devil of a rule is there to go by."

"I do not quite see how the princess is a danger," I said.

It gave me considerable pleasure to bring the conversation back to her.
"For the reason that she is a woman," he answered, "and, if you want an additional reason, because she is a princess. At present I believe she is your friend, but tomorrow—who knows? Why, even Bridget?"

"Bridget! Who is she?"
"My wife in Yadasara. I told you about her."

"You never said her name was Bridget."

"Well, it isn't," O'Ryan answered.
"It's Xenia or some heathen name of that sort, but you couldn't expect me to go about calling her that, so I christened her Bridget, which smacks of the old country."

"And she did not object?"
"Object, is it! When I left Yadasara there wasn't a created man Bridget thought so much of as she did of me, but St. Patrick alone knows what she'll think of me now. You can't rely on women. Faith, it's possible she won't believe my story when I get back."

"Even a man might be forgiven for expressing some doubt, O'Ryan."

"Of course, but you can knock the truth into a man, or try to. There's a prejudice against attempting to knock anything into a woman. It's a silly prejudice when you come to think of it."

"Have you noticed any change in the princess' manner to me?" I asked.
"I have been too busy watching others. One of us has got to do the watching, you know."

"And I don't, you would say."
"No offense, Verrall. We must stick together, and a man in love is seldom the man to act most cautiously. I quite sympathize, but for both our sakes I wish you did not think so much of Princess Daria."

It had never occurred to me to doubt Count Vasca's ability as a leader. I had become used to hearing him spoken highly of, but during the next few days it did seem to my unpracticed mind that he lost good opportunities.
He knew the country and the enemy;
I knew neither, and I therefore concluded that he knew best.

We advanced slowly until we were under the walls of Yadasara, and yet it seemed to me that we had accomplished nothing.

"Are we going to attempt to take it by assault?" asked O'Ryan.

I shook my head. Although with other knights I was constantly in council with Count Vasca, I had no idea what his intention was. He looked sagacious, talked valiantly, but did nothing. Still, it was absurd to think that he was afraid, as O'Ryan suggested.

"You can never tell," O'Ryan said when I laughed at the idea. "Such a stronghold might frighten the bravest man."

Between our encampment and the city ran a broad river, full of strange and unexpected currents and of immense depth, so O'Ryan told me. The city lay obliquely to the river in the form of a rough triangle, the city gates, as I afterward found, being situated at the angles at the base of this triangle, and the city rose from this base gradually toward the huge rock which formed the apex of the triangle. This rock, which was the only part of the city which actually touched the river, rose sheer out of the water for least 600 feet, with hardly a bird's foothold upon it. It was the dominant feature, towering above the highest part of the city, presenting a problem as to how access was obtained to the fortress crowning the summit. It was a problem I was destined to solve later.

The fortress seemed to be cut out of the solid rock.

For several days we encamped idly before Yadasara. The enemy had recrossed the river by means of a bridge of boats nearly two miles higher up the stream, but we made no attempt to follow them. I was doubtful if they had ever crossed it in great force. As far as one could judge, there was no excitement in the city.

I spoke to Walen about it.
"If we are not to attack the city why are we here?" I asked.

"The enemy have retreated. Probably the count thinks that victory enough."

"I do not wonder that the war has been such a long one if it has been carried out in this way."

"No wonder you are impatient, my dear Verrall. So am I. But, then, Vasca commands. It is not without a certain pleasure that I see his comparative failure. Her highness may next time intrust her forces to abler hands."

I could not mistake his meaning. I could not afford to underplay my part.
"It shall be no laggard's campaign, then, I promise you, Sir Walen," I answered.

That night, being sleepless, I stole out of camp to the river. Suddenly there was a sound near me. I stepped back quietly into the darker shadow of a tent and listened. There was no mistaking the sound now—stealthy feet—and the next moment two figures hurried past me toward the river and disappeared over the bank. I opened my mouth to give the alarm as I heard the first dip of an oar, but before I could cry out a third figure was at my side.

It was Count Vasca.
"Is it treachery?" he whispered.

I pointed to the river, where the dim outline of a boat was just discernible as it crept into the shadow of the great rock.

"I heard the sound of footsteps and followed," he said. "How came you here?"

"I could not sleep."
He was silent for a moment.

"Better let them think they have got away undiscovered. I will at once have a sentry placed here. We will not give the alarm tonight. Let's to bed, Sir Verrall. This means action at last."

"When?" I asked.
"Soon surely since they take to spying upon us. You grow impatient. I would that I could trust all as I trust you. There are white livered knights among us, Sir Verrall, or we had made more progress."

He left me at my tent and with a good night went on toward his own.

I told O'Ryan what had happened and repeated the count's words.

"There has always been a sentry by the river," he said thoughtfully. "Perhaps he knew who the fugitives were and had made arrangements for their easy escape."

"Aye, and was so anxious about them that he followed to make certain that they got away safely."

"We must keep close together, Verrall, fighting or not. Lie down and sleep. I'll watch. We'll not both sleep at the same time again."

In one respect at least Vasca had prophesied truly last night. Quite early in the morning it was evident that the day was not to be an idle one.
Troops of men moved along the opposite bank of the river toward the bridge of boats two miles up the stream, a bridge which had been constantly defended and which we had never attempted to force.

It appeared as if neither side wanted an engagement. They made no attempt to drive us off, yet had they attacked us in full force I doubt if we should have been able to successfully resist them.

Some thought of this kind was evidently in Vasca's mind when he saw the enemy in motion.

"They have made up their minds at last," he said to us who were with him. "We must prevent their crossing the river. We are rather the defending than the attacking party now."

We rode toward the bridge, a goodly company, the morning sunlight flashing back from polished helmet and armor. At intervals a jest gave birth to laughter or a deep oath was growled out from the hoarse throat of a warrior who thought no more of coming battle than he did of taking his dinner.

The enemy reached the bridge before us, and, although our archers poured black flights of swift arrows upon them, we could not prevent them crossing, and they dashed upon us on our side of the river.

"Sit tight and remember that you wear armor," was O'Ryan's last piece of advice to me.

It was an equal fight, bravely waged.
Many of my comrades I saw smitten from their saddles, even as many a foeman fell, some to rise and stagger to refuge or another horse, some to lie motionless while the victors trampled over them. Yet I still was safe, my sword swaying heavily to right and left, now stayed by a strong arm, now crashing downward, a foeman falling under its bite. Who fell beside me I did not know, but Walen and O'Ryan were close to me dealing out punishment to all within the sweep of their weapons. They were gallant fighters both. I was glad to be in their company. My sword swung down again upon an enemy, and a cry of exultation burst from my lips as I felt his armor splinter beneath the stroke and for a moment saw the crimson stain the steel's brightness. The lust of battle was upon me.

"A sword!" I cried as I lunged min-down and reached toward one held up to me. Although my horse swerved at that moment, I caught the new weapon, but not securely in my grip, and even as I heard a warning cry behind me a new foe attacked me fiercely. I had seen him afar off in the battle towering above his comrades, a veritable giant. His sword flashed the sunlight a good foot higher in the air than those about him and like a sickle into ripe wheat reaped a space around him. Now it flashed above me, and I was unprepared. Only a feeble grip had I of my own weapon, and scarce could I stay his first tremendous stroke. I could see that Walen was straining his utmost to reach me, seeing my difficulty doubtless, but he was hemmed in, pressed on either side. Much had he to do to keep his own saddle without helping me keep mine. I felt that the decisive moment of the fight had come. One side or the other must quickly yield, and I struggled mightily to get firm hold of my sword. It seemed to turn and slip in my mailed hand. A second stroke from my enemy fell upon me, breaking down my guard, and yet I stayed its fury. It glanced from my armor, and I clutched at my sword desperatly. The man was a giant, but his movements were quick. Perhaps he saw how I was placed and was savage that his victory had not been more easily accomplished. It maddened me to think that I could not meet him fairly. I cursed the weapon in my hand; it must have been loose at the hilt. I cursed the man who, falling, had snapped my own. My teeth were clenched in impotent rage.

The fury of our combat, or I should say, rather, his, had cleared a space about us. My sword twisted in my grasp as he came upon me again. I could have flung it down in my mad fury and given up the fight. But he saved me from that folly. He struck, and my sword was wrenched from me altogether. For one moment I saw it flying through the air, and I thought that the end had come. We were side

"I STRUCK HIS HEAD WITH MY CLINCHED MAILED FIST"

by side; our horses seemed to be locked together. I heard him grunt in savage satisfaction as he raised himself in his stirrups to strike again and give me my quietus. But as he rose so did I, and, swinging my arm, I almost flung myself from the saddle as with all the strength I had I struck his head with my clinched mailed fist. It was a good blow. I felt his head jerk as a bone clicks in its socket, and, giant that he was, he reeled in his saddle, his sword falling lightly and harmlessly across me. At least we were on equal terms now. But, no; the blow had done its work, striking in his helmet it may be, for as the horse plunged the rider rolled to the ground and lay there.

"Well struck, Sir Verrall!"

Walen was beside me. A new sword was in my hand, this time held in a grip of iron, but there was little work for it to do. Almost before we realized the fact the enemy were making for the bridge.

"Are we never to cross the river?"
I asked. "Of what use is a victory unless we follow it up?"

"I have given up trying to read that riddle," Walen answered. "Probably we shall return and be feted as though we had done great deeds."

"And we have done nothing. If her highness—"

"She, after all, is a woman, Sir Verrall," he said. "What should she know of war?"

"A woman, maybe," I answered rather hotly, "but at heart a warrior, I warrant you."

The next day the camp was struck, and we were returning, almost like retreating, as O'Ryan put it.

"It's hard after such a fight that we should gain nothing by it," he said, "although, for my own part, it pleases me well enough."

"You are more easily satisfied than I am."

"Doesn't it occur to you that I have been fighting against my former friends and comrades?"

"Well, what of it? You are in the service of the princess now, with sure promotion before you. What more would you have?"

"A little better knowledge of the future, Sir Verrall. There is too much jealousy surrounding the princess. We had not been going back now were it not so. I say again we might be in retreat were it not for those poor devils of prisoners. They bespeak us conquerors, but where is the honor in a few prisoners?"

"Will they be?"
And then I paused.

"Spitted in the market place? Or a certainty they will."
I was thoughtful. These prisoners troubled me.

THE HALL OF FAME.

JAMES FENIMORE COOPER—American novelist, author of "Leatherstocking Tales." Born Burlington, N. J., Sept. 15, 1789; died Coopers-town, N. Y., Sept. 14, 1851. His father was a congressman and founder of Coopers-town. The son received private instruction and afterward entered Yale, but was expelled in his third year. He was a midshipman in the navy for three years, when he resigned, married and began farming. It was ten years before he published his first novel, which was practically a failure. His next venture in fiction was "The Spy," which was a prodigious success. Other great tales, such as "The Pioneers," "The Pilot," "The Last of the Mohicans," "The Prairie," "The Pathfinder" and "The Deerslayer," followed and established his fame.

Lady Learned About Cardui, The Woman's Tonic and is Now Enthusiastic in its Praise.

Mount Pleasant, Tenn.—"Cardui is all you claim for it, and more," writes Mrs.
M. E. Rail, of this place.

"I was a great sufferer for 2 years and was very weak, but I learned about Cardium, and decided to try it. Now I am in perfect health.

"My daughter, when changing into womanhood, got in very bad health. I gave her Cardui and now she enjoys good health.

"Cardui is worth its weight in gold. I recommend it for young and old."

Being composed exclusively of harmless vegetable ingredients, with a mild and gentle medicinal action, Cardui is the best medicine for weak, sick girls and women.

It has no harsh, powerful, near-poisonous action, like some of the strong minerals and drugs, but helps nature to perform a cure in a natural easy way.

Try Cardui.

Fifty Years Ago Today.
April 15.

President Lincoln issued a proclamation calling for 75,000 state militia to enforce the laws in the states which had passed ordinances of secession and sum-

North Carolina and Kentucky refused to send troops.

DISCIPLINED MINDS.

Unreflective minds possess thoughts only as a jugg does water—by containing them. In a disciplined mind knowledge exists like a vital force in the physical frame, ready to be directed to tongue or hand or foot, hither, thither, anywhere, and for any use desired.

BETTER THAN SPANKING

Spanking does not cure children of bed-wetting. There is a constitutional cause for this trouble. Mrs. M. Summers, Box W, Notre Dame, Ind., will send free to any mother her successful home treatment, with full instructions. Send no money, but write her today if your children trouble you in this way. Don't blame the child, the chances are it can't help it. This treatment also cures adults and aged people troubled with uric difficulties by day or night.

THE RESURRECTION OF MAN

By JAMES A. EDGERTON
[Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.]

If faith in man were music
And love of man were song,
Then might I sing a measure
To move the world along—
Its theme, the Christ that is to be,
The Christ in all Humanity.

Tried by his sense illusions,
Himself man has denied,
Has scoffed the God within him
And has been crucified,
Has borne his cross up Calvary,
The Christ in all Humanity.

Now from his tomb self builded
At last he shall be freed.
That will be resurrection
And Easter morn, indeed!
And he shall know himself and see
The Christ in all Humanity.

I hail him, the arisen,
With lilies at his feet,
Called forth by his own angels
In resurrection sweet.
Roll back the stone of self and free
The Christ in all Humanity.

A SENTIMENT FOR EASTERTIDE

Easter exemplifies the triumph of life. Life is the supreme fact.
Let us believe only in life, refusing to be domineered by the unsubstantial wraith called death, refusing to be diverted thereby from "the upward looking and the light." Then will Easter be to us the most significant, the most inspiring, the most uplifting of all the days that dawn.

THE FOUR VERSIONS OF THE RESURRECTION

CHRISTIAN theologians hold it to be strong proof of the resurrection of Christ that the four evangelists' accounts of that transcendingly important event differ greatly in detail while agreeing exactly in the great central declaration, which is the foundation stone of the Christian religion.

Matthew tells us that at dawn on the first day of the week Mary Magdalene and "the other Mary," whom we know to be the mother of James and Salome, went to see the sepulcher.

"And, behold, there was a great earthquake; for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it.

"His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow:

"And for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men.

"And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified.

"He is not here: for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay.

"And go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead; and, behold, he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him: lo, I have told you.

"And as they went to tell his disciples, behold Jesus met them, saying, All hail. And they came and held him by the feet, and worshipped him.

"Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid: go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me."

Matthew goes on to say that the eleven disciples went to Galilee as bidden and saw and worshiped Jesus there, though some doubted. There and then he gave them their mission to go forth and teach and baptize all nations.

Not one of the other three evangelists mentions the earthquake, but all tell of the coming of Mary Magdalene to the sepulcher and of its being her discovery that the body was not there.
But Mark says that she was accompanied by Mary, the mother of James and Salome. Luke says there were with her this other Mary and Joanna and the other women who had come with him from Galilee, while John describes her as being alone.

Mark's version is that the women found the stone rolled away, entered the sepulcher and saw a white robed young man sitting within, who bade them tell the disciples that Jesus was risen and gone to Galilee. Luke's version is that while the women stood puzzled in the empty tomb two men in shining garments then appeared to them and informed them of the resurrection. Nothing is said of an instruction to go to Galilee. But, according to John, Mary, seeing the stone rolled away, ran back to Peter and "the other disciples whom Jesus loved" and told them that the body had been taken out of the sepulcher. Then these two disciples ran to the tomb.

"The other disciple," who ran the faster, arriving first, but he did not go in until Peter arrived and went in first and verified the absence of the body.
Here John mentions that Peter and the other disciple found the cloths in which the body had been wrapped, but John says, "As yet they knew not the Scripture, that he must rise again from the dead." After they had gone home Mary remained, according to John, weeping at the mouth of the sepulcher. Looking into it after a time, she saw two angels in white within, who spoke to her, asking why she wept. And she answered that "they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him." Just then, turning around, she saw Jesus standing there, but she did not know him. John declares that she even supposed he might be the gardener, who might have removed the body. She asked him for it. But he revealed himself to her, prophesied his immediate ascension and bade her announce it to the disciples.

We have seen that Matthew has the Savior first appearing after the resurrection to Mary Magdalene. Mark's gospel relates the same. Luke declares that he first appeared to two of the disciples who were on the road to Emmaus, but they did not know him.
Mark tells of this appearance also and says he afterward appeared to the eleven as they sat at meat, presumably in Jerusalem. Luke tells of this, stating that it was in Jerusalem and that it happened the same day after the two had returned from Emmaus; also that Christ ate with the disciples
"a piece of a broiled fish, and of a honeycomb."

But at that Mark as well as Matthew drops the narration, while Luke goes on to tell of his leading the disciples out to Bethany and thence in their presence ascending into heaven, while the gospel of John says that after eight days he visited the eleven again, on which occasion he allowed Thomas, the doubter, to touch his wounds and put his hand into his side. And a third appearance to seven of the eleven is related by John, this by the Lake of Tiberias, where they were fishing. Here is told of the miraculous draft of fishes, and here it was, according to John, that Christ ate with his disciples after his resurrection, but John closes his gospel without a word of the ascension except as it may be contained in this:

"And there were also many other things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written."

NEWGY PARAGRAPHS.

Lafayette Heiman, who is at the city hospital, is showing a steady improvement.

One of the features of the St. Tammany celebration by the Red Men May 14, will be a parade.

John Mettert who moved to New Ross a few months ago, has returned to Seymour. He formerly had the store at Flemings and may decide to locate there again.

Only three or four homes in the city are now under scarlet fever quarantine and they will soon be free. There has been but one new case of the disease in the past ten days.

The Holiness Association camp meeting will probably be held at the city park July 7 to 17 instead of July 1 to 10 as first announced.

Representative Wells, of Scottsburg, has had a taste of office which has given him a taste for more and he will probably be a candidate for judge in the new Ripley, Jennings and Scott circuit.

Miss Alma Hart who has been here all week demonstrating Mapeline, went to her home in North Vernon this morning to spend Sunday.

W. S. Everhart, fire chief, has filed his monthly report. It shows but one fire during the month of March, the loss being $76.

John Gallimore and twenty other citizens in the neighborhood of Bill and Ninth streets have filed a petition with the council asking for a light at that corner.

It should be borne in mind by those who desire to take advantage of mortgage exemptions that these must be filed not later than April 30. Under the law the months of March and April are set apart for the purpose.

Mrs. A. B. Shutts and son, Kenneth, went to Brownstown this morning. Kenneth will attend a birthday party given for his twin cousins, Esther and Elizabeth Hamilton, who are five years old today.

Quick delivery trains on the Indiana division of the B. & O. S.W., have been made through trains and hereafter will not stop at Seymour, and the train and engine crews will receive pay for only 170 miles when heretofore they have been paid for 200 miles. The runs have been preferred also.—Washington Democrat.

The base ball league to which the Crothersville team belongs, includes Crothersville Blues, Sapinskys of New Albany, Reccius, Fishers and Kissells of Louisville and the Hoosier Dandies of Jeffersonville. The Blues, Sapinskys, Hoosier Dandies and Reccius have parks.

The seasons schedule calls for fifteen games for each team. The Crothersville Herald says of the team there:

There are a fast lot of players trying for a place on the local team, and it looks as though the town this year will have the fastest team in its history. The lineup for the Blues has not been decided upon definitely. Kovener and Harold will do the battery stunt at the opening game. Kovener is in fine form for this early in the season. Hillerick, who is well known by local fans, will pitch for the Fishers and Duddy will be at the receiving end. An exciting game is expected.

Sets Mark.

It is up to Indiana hens to produce an egg that will tip the scales at more than a quarter of a pound. Oakland, Cal., has a hen that lays eggs weighing one-fourth of a pound, and the newspapers of that city are challenging any other city or state to break that record. The hen, which is a two-year old white Minorca, is the property of Miss Mary De Vol, an Oakland young woman who is an expert chicken fancier. The eggs average 6½ inches in circumference and 7½ inches in length. They contain only a single yolk and the shell is said to be only a little thicker than the shell of the average egg. In view of the recent suggestion made that eggs be sold by weight, it is interesting to consider that but four of these eggs make a pound.

Albert Cox and family moved from Chestnut Ridge to Indianapolis today.

HISTORY OF INDIANA

Senator E. E. Moore Publishes a Valuable New Book.

"A Century of Indiana" is the title of a very interesting and valuable new history of our state. Senator Edward E. Moore, of Connersville, is the author of this book and it is published by the American Book Company.

Such a book was needed and Senator Moore, being a loyal Hoosier, a close student and a forceful writer, was the very man to produce it. The entire history of our state is told in a way that is attractive and every person who wants to know Indiana will appreciate this new book.

The opening chapter deals with the geography of the state and this followed by chapters on the Mound Builders and Indians, the first explorations and settlements, the wars with the Indians, the struggles of the pioneers, the territorial government, admission to statehood, and progress made since Indiana became a state in 1816. The events of each administration are recounted and Indiana's part in the Civil War is most interesting part of the book. The chapter on "Indiana Civics" contains more information about the state's government and institutions than you can find any place else.

This book contains 340 pages and sells for seventy-five cents.

The most fastidious person need not hesitate now about spending a few days in the city prison. The old cots have been replaced by new ones, the old blankets have been burned and new ones purchased, the cells thoroughly cleaned and fumigated, all filth and vermin removed and the small army of undesirables which infested the cells sent into exile. While the place is not recommended as having all of the comforts of home, it is clean and perfectly safe.
